Best described as fin de siecle-inspired iron furniture and accessories for the contemporary manor home, the Pamela Worley Collection was born out of Worley-Thoreson's love of European detail. Since one-of-a-kind European antiques are hard to find, she moved into designing and manufacturing a line of tables, chairs, screens, candle sticks and sconces. Each piece is filled with architectural detail and eloquence.

"I enjoy being around different cultures, and I am inspired by the various styles of architecture I encounter in my travels. I love bringing these architectural details to interior pieces," said Worley-Thoreson. "Architectural details and eloquence are mixed arts whose end is both beautiful and functional. The architectural feel of my designs adds an elegant picturesque style to modern interiors. The designs work in a multitude of home interiors offering style to any look."

With her business partner's expertise in international trade, Worley-Thoreson and Jones put together a line using artisans who could manufacture the classic pieces of the Pamela Worley Collection. The experienced factory of artisans, along with the designers, is devoted to quality and the Pamela Worley Collection of building inspiration from the past to beautify the future.

The 2006 collection will be officially available on Jan. 20 and can currently be seen by trade professionals on display at The Gabler Group in the Dallas World Trade Center. A list of additional showrooms and representatives will soon be available. Worley-Thoreson and Jones have plans to add a series of beds and accessory items to the line by the time of the official launch debut.
